

Joanna Krupa and Brandi Glanville settle smelly vagina suit

By Derrick Bryson Taylor

August 2, 2017 | 10:24am

MORE ON:

JOANNA KRUPA

Joanna Krupa's Mykonos dinner disrupted by 'drunk bullies'

Joanna Krupa files for divorce from Romain Zago

Joanna Krupa splits from husband of less than four years

Joanna Krupa on filming with Gronk: Acting is 'not his forte'

Joanna Krupa and Brandi Glanville have settled their lawsuit in which Glanville claims the model's "p—y smelled."

"We are pleased with the settlement and Joanna is moving and enjoying all the changes that are happening in her life this year," Krupa's attorney said in a statement to People. "Joanna is happy with the settlement and has no regrets. Joanna hopes she has inspired action instead of indifference."

The details of the settlement were kept private, but Glanville did issue an apology.

"I want to apologize to Joanna Krupa for the statements I have made about her," she said. "I regret ever making such statements about Joanna Krupa; I also certainly never intended my statements to be taken so seriously and out of proportion."

The settlement has been a long time coming. Krupa, 38, initially filed her slander suit against Glanville, 44, back in January 2015 after Glanville's 2013 and 2014 "Watch What Happens Live" appearances.

During those times, Glanville falsely accused Krupa of having an affair with Mohamed Hadid, father of models Gigi, Bella and Anwar, in addition to making negative comments about her nether regions.